2. Descripción y objetivos de la materia

Due to its critical content, the course is an overview of main philosophical questions that have shaped the development of academic scholarship in the social sciences with a particular emphasis in the discipline of International Relations. It starts with a general overview of the debate on 'power' in Political Science, its ramifications for IR, and the implications for questions regarding methodology in the field. The second part of the course presents alternative methodological approaches (emphasis in Critical Theory) and then delves into contemporary perspectives and debates that are shaping the discipline's today.

This course builds upon the introductory knowledge and basic concepts covered in other subjects such as Cross-Cultural Communication and International Relations I. It thus provides students with advanced tools for grappling with the complexity of the study of world politics and is aimed at fostering critical skills for interrogating main themes and traditional theories of International Relations. It thus aims at broadening the students' analytical and methodological toolbox to better grasp the dynamics of current global phenomena and the evolution of contemporary debates in the discipline.

This course offers students a great opportunity to develop their analytical and critical skills to understand the broader dynamics of world politics beyond traditional theories and debates. It familiarizes students with important philosophical, epistemological and methodological questions that will help students to broaden their research skills and will prove essential for fostering a healthy dose of criticism around main topics pertaining to their professional career such as issues concerning development, feminism and the environment.

Metodología

Descripción	Tipo horas
Students will be able to produce, in a critical way, their own system of reflection and critical thinking as well as compose their writing texts in a proficient way. Activities such as oral presentations, research group work, debates, academic discussions about current worldwide situations, and a variety of creative activities such as reading and writing academic texts will be fostered in this course. Most of these activities will be produced in pairs or groups and in contexts outside the classroom	Autónomo

The professor will act as an enabler of dialogic interactions in order to promote self-reflection and critical thinking, along with academic proficiency. Classes will be held in an actively communicative environment to enhance the effective learning process. .
